INVESTMENT COMMENTARY

The US central bank slowed down its stimulus efforts this month, which led to a significant rise in the dollar's value. There is considerable uncertainty building ahead of the US election, but financial markets seem to have partially discounted a Trump win to a large degree judging by asset price movements.

We continue to observe a large discount between small and mid-caps, especially outside the US, and large and mega caps stocks globally which sets investors up for an interesting mean-reversion investment opportunity in the mid-term.

In the month, our US regional bank First Horizon was the strongest performer as the company delivered solid results and launched a substantial share repurchase program. Another of our financial positions, namely South Korean bank KB Financial, announced strong value-up initiatives and confirmed that it is on track towards higher payouts to shareholders. French home-developer Nexity is guiding for an improved operating environment which rallied the stock.

The German wafer producer Siltronic was weaker in the month despite delivering a solid earnings report and confirmed guidance.

We sold out of US-based flooring producer Mohawk Industries when it hit our price target and have initiated a position in Beazer Homes, a severely discounted US-based homebuilder which appears to be below-the-radar for most investors.
